

Level 7 Postgraduate Diploma in Traumatology & PTSD

A comprehensive and systematic approach for treating simple and complex PTSD in adults and adolescents (plus children with prior training*)

A Professional Qualification accredited by NCIP

About the Course

This course has been running since 2012. Lucia Hall wrote this professional qualification course based on her experiences of supervising trauma. What she discovered was that, although trained, therapists struggled to implement trauma processes in a systematic and effective manner - especially with regards to complex trauma.

This course has been extremely well received and has been taught both within the NHS and internationally. The NHS IAPT team that Lucia trained expressed feeling skilled and empowered after this training course and issued an invitation to Lucia to come back and teach further courses and workshops. The 2024 course will be the 16th cohort that have participated in this course.

The course has gradually been expanded over the years from 16 days to 22 days, including an additional weekend module teaching Cognitive Processing Therapy (CPT). Participants have found CPT to be an excellent process that complements the other processes taught in the course and enables therapists to work more effectively with an even wider group of trauma clients. Lucia previously taught this course separately, but feedback has resulted in it being incorporated into this PG Diploma course.

Course Outline Structure & Meeting Days

The course will be held on 22 days over 11 weekends (Saturday & Sunday) from January 2024 to December 2024 (the course does not meet in August to allow for holidays, etc.). The course starts each day at 10:00, though we ask people to be on at 09:45 to ensure that everything is working before we start.

Supervision sessions will be arranged after the fourth month of the course in order to allow time for participants to start working through the trauma process with trauma clients. Supervision will be in group format for three hours each month for 12 months and is a requirement of the course. Supervision will be conducted online via Zoom Pro. The supervision is largely didactic and so does not replace participants' clinical supervision.

There is an 80% attendance requirement, including the supervision requirement.

The course consists of solid, evidence-based theory, combined with large amounts of experiential work and supervisory components. The theoretical input encourages critical engagement with the theory and practice of trauma treatment. Assessment is ongoing throughout the course and aims to ensure that students are able to work with the dynamics and processes of trauma; that there is congruence between the student's theoretical knowledge and their clinical practice. Teaching and supervisory methods emphasise the multi-layered, multi-faceted processes of trauma treatment.

Course Philosophy and Theoretical Orientation

This course caters for a range of professionals who wish to develop their role as trauma specialists: mental health practitioners, counsellors, therapists or psychotherapists, psychologists, managers of clinical teams, psychiatric nurses, etc.. The syllabus covers treating adults as well as adolescents, the latter being addressed in two days of the course dedicated to two evidence-based treatments for traumatised adolescents (with applications to children for those trained in this area).

Effective trauma treatment is integrative as it utilises techniques from a variety of schools of thought. The trauma treatment approach taught on this course is not tied to any one approach, but uses aspects of many, with a strong focus on evidence-based trauma practice. As such it may be utilised effectively by practitioners from diverse theoretical backgrounds provided they are prepared to work in a trauma-informed manner. We appreciate the diverse training and approaches that participants bring. Onto that foundation, we offer the opportunity to build a cohesive, integrative way of working with trauma clients - while recognising that a trauma-focused approach requires a different mindset and skillset from typical talking therapies.

The course is taught at postgraduate level; course participants are expected to work academically on this basis. This includes the ability to evaluate theoretical concepts and a commitment to reflect critically and open-mindedly on one's own process, philosophy, theoretical orientation and skills. Discussion in the full group or smaller groups is as important as the tutor-taught components. The experiential process of development encourages participants to learn from one another as well as from the course tutors. The integrative philosophy underpinning this course fosters a multidisciplinary environment where theoretical differences and similarities are creatively valued. Participants are encouraged to integrate the ideas from the course into a personally coherent model of trauma treatment. Participants can be sure that at the conclusion they will have a comprehensive and systematic approach for treating complex trauma in adults and adolescents.

Clinical Requirement

Course participants will be required to document 30 hours of clinical work with trauma clients during the course, and this will include working with both Type I and Type II trauma experiences (simple and complex). More information will be given at the start of the course.

Course dates

January 2024 - December 2024 (with supervision continuing until April 2025).

The start of the course will be on the weekend of January 20/21 (attendance required on both days).

The other provisional dates are detailed below.

The coronavirus pandemic led to us switching the course to online delivery, which has proven to be successful both for this course and our Advanced PG Diploma course, so we plan to continue running the course in an online format. Zoom Pro enables us to use breakout rooms, which keeps much of the dynamics of the course in place and allows us to provide good feedback by observing practice sessions. We also have an experienced team of tutors who facilitate the learning.

Course Fees

We have been informed by our accountants that VAT should not be required to be charged for the 2024 course, so the cost of the course will therefore be £3,980.

We will be offering a monthly instalment payment plan, with a deposit of £280 plus 10 monthly payments of £370.

Participants are also required to become trainee members of the National Council of Integrative Psychotherapists (NCIP), which accredits the course. At the time of writing the cost for trainee membership is £25, which participants pay directly to NCIP.

Our course is not inexpensive, but we are EXTREMELY confident that YOU will find it to be INVALUABLE and YOUR CLIENTS will discover it to be PRICELESS.

It will transform your practice, resulting in the transformation of people's lives.

Deposit & Payment Plans

A deposit of £280.00 is required with this application. If the course does not run for any reason, or if you are not accepted on the course, this deposit will be refunded in full.
